The main characters in this scene stand directly in the line of fire. This is because the creators of The Walking Dead (2010) were so tired of their own tv show that, by the time they were shooting this scene for S11E12, they could't be bothered hiding the plot armor of the main characters anymore.

Horror moments that hit different for women

Was rewatching Texas Chainsaw Massacre the other day, and I realized how the scene where the gas station manager feigns that he's going to help Sally and then comes back in with a rope and bag is so genuinely terrifying to me in a way that my male partner doesn't get. I'm curious, for my fellow femme horror fans out there, which scenes hit different for you?

Which film was it for you?

undisputed champ of bookmarked posts

I love when you finally watch a classic movie, something you put off for ages because it's almost cliché, and it turns out to be as good if not better than its reputation.
